

Giving Love a Chance

“How would I address the most significant or concerning circumstances in my life from a place of Love, without the slightest trace of fear?”

Ask yourself the above question. Pick one aspect of your life and actually come up with some ideas now. You can apply this to relationships, global events, or inner and outer challenges. Do not be concerned about whether or not the ideas are possible, or if you will actually carry them out. Simply imagine serving Love rather than fear or doubt. Allow it to be playful. Let your mind wander in the realm of Love and feel your heart relaxing, opening and expanding. Even if you do not outwardly do a single thing differently, just considering what Love would do will completely reorient your life.

This is the beginning of a life steeped in Love rather than being in servitude to fear. It will be very clear when you reflexively look for a solution through the lens of fear, or take action out of fear. Which may be quite often, as this programming is very strong. But fear not. Persistently asking what Love would do, and vividly imagining it, has the power to dissolve that programming.

Before you know it, you will automatically see, and eventually do, what Love would do. You will be giving Love a chance to blossom inside of you and in the world.